

A Father's Day Message

The following post is something I wrote last year (2016) but didn't post. I feel the call now to post and share this. It will be the first of several messages I will be sharing about Divine Masculine and his experience on this planet thus far.  The angst and cynicism in the beginning was me. Last year. And it is still sometimes the voice I choose. But today, I share it for release, and to maintain the whole picture I meant to paint when I first wrote this. Always In love.
